

Like most students, the pressures are enormous. Most of these students, all Christians, were working on their PhD's... Biochemistry, Law, International Business, Industrial Design, Medicine, Psychology, Asian history, Ancient Mesopotamia, Chinese literature, Chemistry, Research of Pharmaceuticals, English literature, Microbiology, etc. Nearly all of them were working on research of some kind or another. One fellow said he was working on a virus that was in a leaf. I asked, "Can you see a virus?" He took a piece of paper and started to draw circles and lines. It just blew me away with the intelligence of these students. However, they all had problems and concerns – some more serious than others, but problems none the less.

Just verbalizing it was a big help for them. They just needed someone to listen. Some needed help developing a schedule and being disciplined in sticking to it. It is always easier sometimes to talk with an outsider.

They were so precious. Each one wanted to be sure they were doing what God really wanted them to do.

After an hour or more, I prayed with them, putting my hand on their head and my arm around them, and committing them to the Lord. These were very special moments. Each one had tears, as well as myself, as we felt the Lord's presence and touch. This is certainly one of the most vital and essential parts of my ministry. Each one gave me their name, address, phone number, and email. I will pray for these students and stay connected to them as long as they want.

The Korean breakfast was a 10-12-course meal, consisting of ribs, a whole fish, sushi, breakfast soup swimming with fish, tohu, and spicy pieces of cabbage. Added to all that was short grained "sticky" rice that arrives in little metal bowls. You are given thin metal chopsticks. All this is traditionally served with bancha side dishes of kim chee, eggs, oysters, mushrooms, jalapeno peppers, small cockles topped with spicy Korean bean paste, a whole mackerel fish deep fried and picked at bite by bite, and of course, tea. This breakfast is the secret to remaining healthy and vibrant. It is required of working folk, who work 14-hour days. I loved it all. The experience was wonderful!

Thank you, my friend, for praying and for your financial support. It gets more exciting each month. May you, too, be blessed as you serve Him.
